I had a sore lower and upper back. I booked a 30 minute sports massage and was given a booking immediately. I was shown into the massage room and asked to undress so removed shirt/shoes. The lady came in and asked me to remove trousers so I did, she then asked me to remove underwear which for some reason I did, I then quickly lay on my stomach. I was covered with a towel which was removed after 2 minutes.

The back massage seemed wrong as she stood at my head and massaged down my spine, from neck to buttocks, I am not a qualified masseuse but I was always taught you massage up the spine towards the heart. After 15 minutes I was asked to lie on my back (I had no underwear on) so I did which felt awkward. She paid particular interest in massaging my groin/upper thigh area for a few minutes at which point she grabbed my 'thing' and asked if I wanted a happy ending for £20.

I have had my wallet stolen before and been stabbed in a taxi in Cape Town South Africa, the feeling I got here was no different, I feel violated, I am a family man and only wanted some immediate relief to a painful back which 2 hours after the massage is more painful than when I went in there.

Needless to say I wont be going back, and would recommend going to a registered physiotherapist for treatment instead.

Kate is probably the best (Chinese looking) one I would probably choose but a shame she don't do it anymore.
I've seen some good intel on natural ways (baker st), china five elements (Liverpool Street), fantasia on this thread, it's just deciding which one is best!

No Gary, that's all bases covered. There's also adjacent women on AW who do massage/b2b only.
Not been in China Five Elements there in a while, last time was a greedy so-so MILF. But extras a cert there and despite the name it's Chinese, EE and Latinas. I asked for Chinese by phone but there was one of each sat in reception!
I generally notice that asking to see women is met with just a tut and eyes skyward. Never "Yes, of course!" but never "No way" either. They know you'll walk.
